

Using the information gathered earlier to create a well-tailored email.

Montag, 19. Januar 2026 15:35

Prompt for using these information above to create a well-tailored email.

I want to address a "[RESPECTIVE ROLE]" at this company "[RESPECTIVE COMPANY]" . Based on the information gathered in Phase 2, can you create a short but strong initial email to that person to get his attention?

I want you to write an E-Mail with a similar structure, style and tone like the Initial E-Mails that were provided beforehand, to basically feed you ("The AI Agent"). The goal is that the outreach mail fits to the individuals Sales Reps style perfectly, but at the same time, the Mail should be tailored to the company/industry specific information, that we've just gathered in Phase 2 to create the informative table(s).

Use all the information you have gathered about the specific Role/Person and the Company (not only what they currently offer, but also recent news from the website etc., which could positively influence their decision to partner with us, Thales). Make sure to use the orientation from all the input mails that should define the general structure/style/tone/LENGTH of the e-mail. Generally, if no clear pattern could be found, focus to include the following information in the initial mail.

- A first paragraph referencing specific initiatives, products, or platforms of the new company
- A second paragraph highlighting the strategic importance of software for the company
- A third paragraph introducing Thales Sentinel and its value in securing, licensing, and monetizing software, without disrupting hardware
- A fourth paragraph linking the company's roadmap or direction to specific low-friction opportunities
- A closing paragraph with a 20-minute conversation ask and a reference to Software Monetization Solutions by Thales

Keep the style professional, concise, and appealing to the audience (The "[Respective Role]").